Continuation of 3. NOTE: Applicants have made additional changes to the claims that were not previously agreed upon during the last telephonic interview held 5-21-01.

- 1) Claim 164 was amended to recite "increased levels of, adenosine or adenosine receptors," instead of "increased levels of adenosine." Additionally, claim 164 was also amended to recite oligos anti-sense to "a gene encoding or regulating the expression of a protein" instead of "a gene encoding a protein," these two changes alone to claim 164 raise new issues that would require further consideration due to new matter since neither change is supported by the specification as filed.
- 2) Claim 173 was amended to recite wherein at least one oligonucleotide is effective to alleviate hyper-responsiveness to, and/or increased levels of adenosine or adenosine receptors, and was further amended to recite oligos anti-sense sense to a gene controlling expression of a protein associated with hyper-responsiveness to and/or increase levels of adenosine or adenosine receptors. Applicant's specification does not indicate that they are not in possession of such oligos. Therefore, the invention as a whole would have been prima facie obvious at the time of filing over these changes would raise new issues under 35 USC § 112, first paragraph for new matter.
- 3) Claims 185-187, and 221-222 were also amended to recite "increased levels of, adenosine or adenosine receptors," instead of "increased levels of adenosine." Again the scope of this amendment is not supported by the specification as filed and would therefore raise the issue of new matter under 35 USC § 112, first paragraph.
- 4) Claim 200 is amended to recite wherien the oligo comprises a fragment that has a T/U nucleic acid content of up to and including 15%. This amendment is not supported by the specification, since the specification and original claims supports only a description of the A, C and G content of the oligo, not the T/U content. This change would also raise the issue of new matter.
